

Amanda Rangel Joins VirTrial as VP

29 January 2019 | News

Early in her career, Rangel founded HUNT Services, a coalition of independent clinical research sites that she grew to the point of acquisition. Having managed that site network, Rangel is extremely proficient in clinical site operations.

VirTrial, a leading telehealth platform provider for virtual clinical trials, has named Amanda Rangel as VP of Business Development.

“Having worked with Amanda for the past 10 years, I know she understands what will make a clinical trial successful,” said

Mark Hanley, President and CEO of VirTrial. "Amanda was my top choice because of her perfectionism, and I know that's what our customers will expect."

Early in her career, Rangel founded HUNT Services, a coalition of independent clinical research sites that she grew to the point of acquisition. Having managed that site network, Rangel is extremely proficient in clinical site operations. She also is an experienced global business development and operations executive with a 15-year history in the clinical research industry. Rangel recently served as Sr. Director, Global Business Development for Radiant Research/Synexus, the largest site network in the world.

"I'm thrilled to join the VirTrial team and to be part of a solution from a site perspective. Having been involved with a company that conducted over 14,000 trials, I know from experience that sites and patients are integral to the success of every project," said Rangel. "This is why VirTrial's vision is a hybrid virtual trial model, helping make clinical trials more convenient for patients and efficient for research sites," she concluded.