Opens office in Thailand

US based Frozen Wheels, a leading distributor of food and PPE, is announcing the opening of an office in Thailand in response to the growing demand for powder-free nitrile examination gloves.

"The COVID-19 pandemic has caused a challenge for healthcare facilities to source quality gloves with FDA approvals and Frozen Wheels is stepping up to the challenge once again by establishing a local office in the country of Thailand and taking control of the supply chain to make sure that our customers have this essential element ready in inventory," said Isaac Halwan, Frozen Wheel's CEO in a meeting with some key medical device and healthcare buyers.

The company also announced that it is in the final stages to sign two new contracts for a total of 500 million additional gloves that will be in the USA in 2020.

Thailand is known around the world for manufacturing the best nitrile gloves and the company is at the epicenter of the action with some of the largest manufacturers.

Frozen Wheels expects to quickly hire 10 employees to oversee the contracts and supply chain to make sure products are inspected and delivered on time.

The local office will also be looking into sourcing additional contracts and building stronger relationships with the local industry with a long-term commitment of investment in the local Thailand economy and the unmatched compromise to supply its healthcare customers in the United States.
