Record international participation reflects renewed momentum in pharma manufacturing and global sourcing, as easing tariffs fuel growth

CPHI & PMEC China (June 24-26th) returns to the Shanghai New International Expo Center amid a marked surge in international interest, with industry momentum rebounding following a string of positive developments in global trade and pharmaceutical investment.

The 2025 edition is set to become the largest pharma event ever held in Asia, with more than 90,000 attendees and over 12,000 international executives expected.

The recent trade tariff reprieve, alongside an improving global outlook for pharma – i.e. higher valuations and improved capital expenditure by biotech and big pharma – is transforming into greater international interest at CPHI & PMEC China. International executives will visit the event in record numbers as pharma companies look for new ingredient suppliers and equipment providers.

Another key trend emerging is the increasing interest from global pharmaceutical companies in Chinese biotech assets – not only for access to the domestic market, but also for international licensing opportunities. Western drug makers are actively exploring strategic licensing deals that leverage China's rapidly evolving biotech landscape as a springboard for global launches.

Notably, CPHI & PMEC China has also seen rapidly rising interest from the Middle East, where national strategies are underway to establish regional manufacturing hubs. Executives from across the Gulf are actively engaging with the event in search of new suppliers and equipment partners, joining bigger delegations from India and the United States — China's long-standing strategic trade partners in the pharmaceutical supply chain.

“The news cycle has shifted to a more positive outlook for global trade between China, the USA, and India. However, setting aside these evolving dynamics, the more important point is that the fundamentals of the industry remain incredibly strong. We're seeing global pharma achieving record numbers in discovery targets and returning to growth, alongside the rise of new manufacturing hubs around the world. Why is this important for CPHI & PMEC China? Because international attendees are coming to tap into the vast network of ingredient, manufacturing, and starting material companies within China. These are the partnerships that drive global manufacturing growth," commented Natasha Jennings, Head of Global Growth Marketing. "Further strengthening the outlook, we're witnessing a robust domestic market and the emergence of new manufacturing centers in Southeast Asia — both of which are contributing to increased demand for China-based ingredient partners."

Additionally, this year's event will be preceded by a one-day Natural Extracts Buyer Programme (June 23^d at the Grand Mercure Shanghai Century Park), with a Pharma Machinery Buyer Programme running in parallel [June 24-25 at the International Visitor Lounge, SNIEC Shanghai].

CPHI & PMEC China is at the heart of the world's second-largest pharma economy and its largest manufacturing centre. In total, 3500 exhibitors and executives from 150 countries will explore a massive 230,000+SQM of exhibition space, spanning 12 different zones – including two additions for 'BioTech' and 'Fluid & Precision Equipment'.

Running alongside the exhibition will be host of additional opportunities including the CPHI Celebration Awards & Networking Party, a dedicated conference – featuring the 10th Biopharmaceuticals Outlook Summit & 2025 International Regulatory Agencies Updates and Q&A Session – the Innovation Gallery & Tour, and even, regional Plant Visits.
