BioSpectrum the business of Bio & Health Sciences ASIA EDITION

Mylan resolves Brovana patent litigation

May 25, 2012 | News | By BioSpectrum Bureau

Mylan resolves Brovana patent litigation

Singapore:Ã?Â Mylan Specialty, which was formerly known as Dey Pharma, entered into a deal with Sunovion Pharmaceuticals, to resolve the patent litigation relating to Sunovion's Brovana product.

The US District Court for the Southern District of New York's final judgment and order noted that the parties entered into a settlement and license agreement and that Sunovion, which was previously called Sepracor Inc, acknowledged that two Mylan patents are valid, enforceable and infringed by Sunovion's Brovana product. The patents are set to expire on June 22, 2021. The terms of the parties' agreement, however, are confidential.

Ms Heather Bresch, CEO, Mylan, said that, "We are pleased with this settlement and remain confident in the intellectual property protecting Perforomist, as well as our combination product for the treatment of chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), which is presently in development. We believe this settlement and judgment by the court further strengthens the potential of our Specialty franchise and its portfolio of products."